Sugar Substitutes and You

At a first glance, artificial sweeteners seem like harmless and attractive alternatives to standard sugar. Sugar substitutes provide a sweet taste without the calories or carbohydrates that accompany sugar and other sweeteners. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has approved the use of acesulfame-K (Sunett®), aspartame (Equal®), neotame, saccharin (Sweet’N Low®), sucralose (Splenda®) and stevia.

Despite this approval, some health experts discourage the use of sugar substitutes. Keep the following tips in mind to ensure that you’re safely consuming them:

- Always read the nutritional facts on foods and drinks to know what and how much of a substitute is being used.
- Review the acceptable daily intake guidelines for each approved sugar substitute on the FDA’s website.
- Remember, just because a product contains a sugar substitute does not necessarily mean it is calorie-free or even healthy.

Sweeter Than Sugar

That’s right—artificial sweeteners and sugar substitutes are often extremely sweeter than pure sugar.

Combating the Loneliness Epidemic at Work

If you feel lonely at work, you’re not alone. In fact, about one-third of U.S. workers reported that they felt a general sense of loneliness, emptiness and disconnection from their co-workers.

Signs that you may be struggling with loneliness include feeling disconnected from your peers, heavily scrutinizing others, being sensitive to others’ responses toward you and having difficulty trusting people.

The hardest step to take when overcoming loneliness can often be the first one—reaching out to your co-workers. But the rewards can be invaluable. The odds are that you are not the only person in your department, or your company, suffering from loneliness. By reaching out and connecting your co-workers—through the use of work-approved electronic communications—you can help yourself stop feeling lonely while also helping others.
